EDUCATION DAY

Europe at the crossroads

In an uncertain world, companies need to look at risk from a 360 degree perspective and not focus on the typical risk committee perceptions of risk. This was the advice from Sir Jeremy Greenstock, Chairman of Gatehouse Advisory Partners and former high level British diplomat...

OTHER SESSIONS

The role of education in developing tomorrow's risk leaders

Education is at the heart of the issues confronting the risk management community at a time when top management and boards are keenly aware of the need to manage risk efficiently in a complex and constantly evolving environment. A battle for recognition and a seat at the table is raging.

Women in Risk Management Lunch

Isabel Martinez, Head of the Finance and Marketing department, Autonomous University of Madrid welcomed about 120 women to discuss the values that drive them in their careers and in their lives...

Challenges and opportunities for captives – in the post-BEPS world

Clearly, the OECD has triggered a new round of world interest in captives, and not for the right reasons, as it might have resulted in tax authorities worldwide questioning the legitimacy of captives.

QUOTES OF THE DAY

"I really enjoyed the session on millennials and generation Y. It's the first time I've been to a discussion about millennials that I thought was positive."

Emily Cox, Global Insurance Manager, Solvay

"Mark Gallagher was inspiring. Formula 1 is a completely different world but what he said was still relevant."
